OFINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From the Christian Inquirer.

A more sincer and wholesome protest against the false life and unspecial tendencies of the times, we have not not with. Charles Lamb night so have breathed out his soul after a five years' residence in this country. Indeed, our author has a mind more kindred with that quant and centle moralist, than any American who has written. There is much admirable preaching in this book, which evidently comes from a heart tried by butter experiences, and which is conveyed in such grotesque wit as to commend it to the most unwilling listener. The truth is, the book is a disguised semion upon the folly of worldliness, unbelief, and filtemper, recorded in a thunder storm of grumbling, with disshes of saturine humor and quant imagination illuminating the preacher's quere but earnest face.

From the Home Journal.

Whoever the author may be, however, and whatever may be his bodily state, he has clearly no need of a physician to "minister to a mind diseased." In an inchectual sense, "invalid" lays about him with uncommin vigor, uttering nevel opinions with boldness, wit tempered by wisdom, and wisdom pointed and sharpened with wit.

From the Evening Post.

He shows a seusibility to the beautiful and a heart to love what is noble and true. We have followed the wanderings of his mind, of en with the deepers attestion, always with interest. We have once of twice chaght our selves in supposing that the writer of the "Revertes of the Bacheler" might have had a hand in the authorship.

Kedron: indeed, nearly all the streams hallowed by the patriarchs and prophets, or the Saviour and his Aposles, are described with accuracy, in truly eloquent and impressive language. The Rev. Dr. Cheever has revised the work for the American press, and prefixes an introduction, in which he pays a just tribute to its morts. The liturations are numerous and well executed, and the typography, paper and binding are such as render the volume a handsome suft book, as well as an ornament to the hirary."

"The author brings within the scope of his subject the physical geography and matural history of the Orient, the relates which howevest of former grandear, and much of the history of the Bible. A great variety of illustrative engravings are thrown in, which add to the interest of the wars. The references made to the recent discoveries of Layard, Rich, Rawlinson and others, are valuable. Dr. Cheever has prefaced a beautiful and characteristic essay, the work is well got up, and wait serve a good holiday purpose."

"The method of this book is well conceived. A section is given to each of the leading rivers about which is many celebrated events of the Bible cing; and this is divided into, first, a troographical caractive of the sectory, its past and present condition, from the books of travellers, and them a review of Scripture incident. All this is done, not in the locae, careless way in which calculation to fact and solid interest in the mind of the reader. The book that is very a and numerously illustrated with views of rivers, plants, animals, ancient remain of art, &c., from the latest stores of Layard agd others. The work is an admirable one for Sonday reading, and is a timely publication in connection with the present opening of Eastern antiquities.
